Q: Getting a list of all monitors in windows 7 via python I am new to programming and I want to get a list of all the monitors on my computer using Python. Is this possible and if so, can someone help me out? A: You need to look at pywinauto. It supports the automation of many screen related things. The example below will list all visible screen and also get the display name of the screen:

import pywinauto.app = pywinauto.application.Application() screens = app.screens for screen in screens: display_name = screen.GetDisplayName() print display_name

 Sunday, January 9, 2015 The 2014 NFL All-Star Game is less than three weeks away, and while the NFL will crown its game in New Orleans (the only real national title game we have) there are plenty of enticing openers in the meantime. What's more, the Pro Bowl is an important part of that whole event, and once again the majority of the selections will be announced during this weekend's festivities. Since we recently highlighted the top rookie candidates for the All-Pro Team, we figured we'd do the same for the Pro Bowl, a bit of a smaller event given that the starters number about 30 players. Once again, we'll be looking specifically at the position battles, which take place during the week leading up to the game. While most players will be determined on the field, you never know in a long-established game what will happen. For instance, if Joey Bosa of the Chargers gets hurt in the week leading up to the game, fans in San Diego might be seeing Jason Verrett, who has been the best rookie corner in the NFL this year. So while we'll be following a lot of the game and probably have more analysis regarding the Pro Bowl as a whole in the weeks to come, the best we can do right now is try to figure out which players may be up for selection in that game. With that in mind, the following list has been whittled down to include players with the best chance of making the Pro Bowl. Keep in mind that there are as many as 10 players at each position, so you'll notice a lot of players who received votes on the ballot in last year's Pro Bowl, but were snubbed, and vice versa.
